THE ROMAN CALENDAR.

In which, besides the series of the Months and Days, the different Festivals, Games, the Rising and Setting of the Constellations, and some other things worthy to be known, are taken notice of.

The Roman Month is divided into Calends, Nones, and Ides; all which are reckoned backward. The Calends are the first day of the Month; as Calendæ Januariæ is the first day of January; Pridie Calendarum vel Calendas, is the 31st of December; III. Cal. the 30th; IV. Cal. the 29th, &c. The Nones, being four, follow the Calends; as IV. Nonas Jan. is Jan. 2. III. Non. Jan. 3. Pridie Non. Jan. 4. and Nonæ Jan. is Jan. 5. But, in March, May, July, and October, there are six Nones.* After these, the Ides in each month are eight; as VIII. Id. Jan. (id est, Octavo Iduum, vel Idus), is Jan 6th, and so till you come to the Ides themselves, Idus Januariæ, that is, Jan. 13. Where note, that, when the Accusative Case is used, the Preposition ante is understood; as III. Calendas, Nonas, Idus, tertio ante Calendas, Nonas, Idus; and remember that, after the Ides (which are on the 13th day of eight of the Months, and on the 15th of the other four which have six Nones each), the Calends following are to be reckoned to the next Month.

OF THE

As, as it denoted a particular coin, was at first libralls, or of a pound weight, and, even when it was diminished, retained the name of libello. The first impress of this coin was a Janus, and on the reverse the rostrum of a ship.

Quadrans and teruncius are used to signify the smallest brass coin after the reduction of the as, as the sestertius was the least of the silver coins.

The sestertius was a silver coin, equal to the fourth part of a denarius.

Sestertium in the neuter gender signifies mille sestertium nummorum.

In speaking of sums above a thousand, there is often a twofold ellipsis, sometimes of the word sestertium, or its mark; sometimes of the word mille; as in Marital vi. 10, Pauca Jovem nuper cum millia (sestertia) forte rogarem; and vii. 9, Septingenta (millia) Tito debet Lupus. There is another double ellipsis to be observed, when they use the numeral adverbs; as HS. bis et tri- cies in annos singulos Ferri decernebatur, quod maioribus solvaret, Cic. Verr. iii. 70: where centum millia is understood, scil. 3,200,000 nummi sestertii, or 3,200 sestertia. If the sum is to be reduced to nummi sestertii, then centum and mille both are unnecessary, and that which is to be multiplied by 100,000, if you would reduce the sum to sestertia, the word centum being then understood, it must be multiplied only by 100. Thus decies HS. is 1,0'0,000 nummi sestertii, or 1000 sestertia.

Mille sestertia is 1000 times that sum, viz. 8072*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

When the numbers have a line over them, centena millia is understood, as in the case of the numeral adverbs; thus HS. MC. signifies the same with millies centies HS. that is 110,000,000 nummi, or 884,020*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* whereas HS. MC. without the cross line, denote only 1100 nummi, or 8*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.*

Denarius was the chief silver coin among the Romans :

The subdivisions of the denarius were the quintarius, or half, so called from its value of five asses; and likewise victoriatus, from the image of Victory sometimes impressed upon it; and the sestertius, which has been mentioned already.

The pondo argenti among the Romans is a sort of numeral expression of sums of money, and is different from the common libra, which consisted only of 84 denarii, or 96 drachms. The pondo, according to Budæus's valuation, amounts to the value of an Attic mina, 5*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* or, according to Arriocola, to 5*l.* 2*s.*

There were sometimes also coined of brass the triens, sextans, uncia, sextula, and dupondius.

Note. Those who do not understand decimal fractions, will observe that the denominator of every such decimal is a unit with as many cyphers as there are places of numbers in the fraction; that the decimal parts are separated from the integer by a full point, and that the first figure, or first two figures, in the decimal parts, are chiefly to be regarded, without considering the number of places; .5 is half, .25 a quarter; as in pes 11.604, which is 11 inches, and 604 thousandth parts of an inch, or very little more than half an inch; had it been .500, it would have been just half, or, if .250, just a quarter of an inch.
